AIT is located 40 km north of Bangkok on Paholyothin Road. Tell the taxi driver you would like to go to the Asian Institute of Technology (AIT) beside Thammasat University Rangsit. Not all drivers on queue at the transportation center may easily recognize AIT but then when you mention Thammasat Rangsit, they can recognize your direction. AIT and Thammasat University have the same entrance to their campuses.

A taximeter starts at 35 baht and adds up 1 baht for every 2 kilometers. It is widely practiced that when a taxi passes through an expressway or motorway, the passenger carries the toll expenses. It is recommended to pay the tolls, as the trip will be faster. An estimated 600 baht (approx. 15 USD) will be shown on the meter by the time you reach AIT under normal traffic conditions and about 700 baht when the traffic is heavy during busy hours.

Always insist on the use of the meter. Public taxi service is available at the public transportation center of Suvarnabhumi International Airport, but not at the terminal building itself. To get a taxi, a passenger must take the AOT shuttle bus from level 2 or level 4 of the passenger terminal building (express route recommended, free of charge) to the transportation center. At the time of this posting discussions were ongoing to allow taxis to take passengers directly from the terminal. This service may be available when you come to Thailand.

Following is information about the return trip from the airport. As many taxi and limousine drivers will be unfamiliar with AIT's location, maps in Thai and in English are available to print and hand to the driver.

Please find attached herewith AIT's location, maps in Thai and in English for your perusal and reference and kindly print and hand to the driver for the clear direction.
